Further Reading

Second Edition

On Demand invited visitors to write or draw on copies of the first edition of the publication in reaction to a selection of works featured in the exhibition. These responses were scanned and used to inform the second edition of the Further Reading document, created insitu in the temporary On Demand office space at RMIT Design Hub.

On Demand is an ongoing collaboration between an editor and a curator: Laura Gardiner and Audrey Thomas-Hayes. We seek to explore the boundaries of both these roles, and the inherent attributes and responsibilities of each to one another, and, more broadly, that of the gallery space and printed matter. Further Reading is a project that offers a parallel entry point to the exhibition, editorialising works within the gallery space with a selection of key readings and references, to encourage further engagement with the exhibition content.

The project extends On Demand's ongoing enquiry into the formal qualities of curatorial and editorial spaces, overlaying these formats with responsive projects. Historically these roles aspire to clear and specific functions; a beginning and ending that mark phases of producing an exhibition or publication. On Demand produces active editorial that extends the boundaries of the curatorial.

On Demand will activate the front desk in Project Room 1 at Design Hub for the closing week of Fashion & Performance: Materiality, Meaning, Media, Tuesday 31 March - Thursday 2 April, temporarily transforming it into a publicly-accessible office space and reference library.

'When the woman was gone, Tony Takitani went back into his wife's closet, shut the door, and let his eyes wander vacantly over her dresses. He could not understand why the woman had chided when she saw them. They, they looked like shadows that his wife had left behind. Size-2 shadows of his wife hung there in long rows, layer upon layer, as if someone had gathered and hung up samples of the infinite possibilities (or at least the theoretically infinite possibilities) implied in the existence of a human being.' 'As a result, I lived in the knowledge that I had jeans on, whereas normally we live forgetting that we're wearing underdrawers or trousers. I lived for my jeans, and as a result I assumed the exterior behavior of one who wears jeans. In any case, I assumed a demeanor. It's strange that the traditionally most informal and anti-etiquette garment should be the one that so strongly imposes an etiquette. As a rule I am bolstorous, I sprawl in a chair, I slump wherever I please, with no claim to elegance; my blue jeans make these actions, made me more polite and mature. I discussed it at length, especially with consultants of the opposite sex, from whom I learned what, for that matter, I had already suspected: that for women experiences of this kind are familiar because all their garments are conceived to impose a demeanor—high heels, girdles, brassieres, pantyhose, tight sweaters.' 'It would benefit us if we would rather present ourselves as we are, than try to show ourselves as something we are not. Male, female, androgynous. The eternal physicality of bodies. The space between existing reality and the impossible... Projections deceive, the mirror lies... Even eternity is made up from moments... When strength falters, deception steps in... What if everything is but a dream, dissolving at a moment's notice?'.

'There is something so intimate, sensual and moral about what we hang at the margins of our bodies that makes dress susceptible to a kind of criticism that does not accompany the other objects we use.' 'But Denise was absorbed by the display at the principal entrance. There she saw, in the open street, on the very pavement, a mountain of cheap goods - bargains, placed there to tempt the passer-by, and attract attention. Hanging from above were pieces of woolen and cloth goods, merinos, chevalets, and tweeds, floating like flags; the neutral, slate, navy-blue, and olive-green tints being relieved by the large white priceickets. Close by, round the doorway, were hanging strips of fur, narrow bands for dress trimmings, fine Siberian squirrel-skin, spotless snowy swanboud, rabbit-skin imitation ermine and imitation mink. Below, on shelves and on tables: amidst a pile of remnants, appeared an immense quantity of hosiery almost given away knitted woollen gloves, neckerchiefs, women's hoods, waistcoats, a winter show in all colours, stippled, dyed, and variegated, with here and there a flaming patch of red. Denise saw some tartan at nine scns, some strips of American vizen at a franc, and some mittens at five sou. There appeared to be in immense clearance, sail going on; the establishment seemed bustling with goods, blocking up the pavement with the surplus.'

'Individuals are always on the lookout for what they should have, do or look like, to fit into the appropriate group structure because the majority of people no longer live under the influence of ancestral traditions... They wear what other people would like to see in them and thus it becomes important for them to know what is fashionable and what may fit into the framework of social life.'

'Clothes, another of our languages, another of our codes, another of the forms our histories take, keep changing, like words, out faster; and, like words, everybody uses them and, and, whether they are conscious of it or not, everyone has their own style, just as everyone has their own vocabulary. The reason that people are disdainful of fashion is that they fear that many of the things they value most in their lives may be more like fashion than anything else.'

'Shrimpton was under pressure to have cosmetic surgery to remove the bags under her eyes which were disguised by careful upward glancing. Those bags were an enormous nuisance all the time I was modelling. Fashion editors and photographers were constantly saying to me: 'You must get to bed earlier.' But it was nothing to do with the lack of sleep or anything else. God had given me bags under my eyes, in the same way as he had forgotten to give me a bosom and shoulders.' 'When a horse is shown to a buyer or has to be photographed, my grandfather finds all kinds of gear to 'animate' the horse; he shakes a bucket filled with tools or a can full of coins. Sometimes he wavers with a handkerchief at the end of the session they both look very strict and severe; the horse being 'animated' and my grandfather with his head elevated, watching the horse.'
